OLNEY AREA

This publication contains information about the area near State Highway #202 and the Klatskanine River.

Some sites have not been throughly investigated. Other sites have been totally obliterated and all that remains are the memories of the older residents of the area. Some times there is disagreement in the informant interviews (or their memories). A decison was made to print the information as it was received and at least preserve that. At some time in the future, more information may help us to decide which version is correct.

SIMMONS/SIMMONDS Family Plot

Located about between Milepost 17 and Milepost 19 on HIghway 202, before climbing to the summit. "OR Dept of Transportation Cemetery Survey."
21 May 1987, Interview with Susan Vernon.
She believes Mrs Simmons told her many years ago that they had buried some children or babies there.
Ken Lonquist believes that Mr Simmons was buried there, but was moved to Greenwood Cemetery many years ago.

RYAN Family Plot

Sue Vernon said this site on Elk Mountain, across the river, was visible from HIghway 202 after Crown Zellerbach clear-cut the area. She said it is quite likely that they logged right over it.

Unknown

Sue also mentioned a site she and her husband, Bill stumbled across about 25 years ago, past the end of Saddle Mountain Road. She described the site as the foundation of an old house, with a barn standing nearby. The barn had been made by the old methods, carved dovetails, mortise and puncheon construction. No nails were used. The gravestones looked as if they had been made by the family, not by an expert stonemason. The lettering was not very deep and was very faded.

INDIAN GEORGE

He died in 1886, was buried 2½ miles east of Alex Normand's house, a few hundred feet from the Barth Road, according to Alex Normand in a November 1956 newspaper articel.
Evelyn Hankel remembers her people, the Leahys, speaking of hearing his dogs bark when he died. The Leahy homestead is located next to the present Klatskanine fish hatchery.
Emma Miller tells his story in her book on Clatsop County History.

JOHANSON FARM

On Green Mountain road, present owners Jim and Jacquie Hyde. Some of the Johanson babies may have been buried here. Mrs. Hyde turned up a skull while building fence, and replaced it.

NORMAN"S HILL

This site is near Smiley's Hole and Green Mountain Road. A row of cedars was planted that goes up to the rock cliff. See Art Markkola's interview.

BARNEY CREEK
A logger was killed when cutting a tree which split, (barber-chaired) and fell on him. He was buried near where he was killed, by where the concrete bridge is now. This happened about 1900. A picket fence was placed around the grave and a slab of wood was his marker. HE had been working for McGregor and Malone LOgging company. See Art Markkola interview. Minnie Marxen told Art about it around 1916-18. Art thinks Hank Pfund and Jack Niemi should know about it.

GREEN MOUNTAIN ROAD
Almost at the end at the left where Art Markkola's uncle, Isreal Kallio lived,a man died and was buried there. He died in the winter, but the death was reported to the court house in the spring.

SADDLE MOUNTAIN ROAD
A baby of Niemi's was buried. From Olney bridge go up the road to the summit about 2000 feet along the ridge which goes at an angle NE of the summit. See Waino Parhaniemi interview.

FITCHA-LILLENAS-ESTOOS
This site on Lillenas Road is said to be reached more easily from the Swenson side of the hill. See " Memoirs of Upper Walluski Valley Pioneers" by Dorothy Lillenas Peeke. This book tells about the cemetery and the families who were buried there, and is in the Astoriana Collection of Astoria Public Library. T8N R8W Section 31, SW ¼ SE ¼ LLBK 60 p. 16 recorded by Crown Zellerbach Corp. Sep 21 1966.

WALLUSKI ROAD
Mrs. Labiski's place, originally MOffet property. Her husband buried a tombstone in the ground because she was superstitious and didn't like to be reminded that there was a grave there, T8N R9W Section 34, south of LIttle Walluski River. See Waino Parhaniemi interview.

WALLUSKI AREA
John Heino property. This cemetery was used before Greenwood T8W R9W Section 27. It was near the original stables. It was owned by either MOffet or Stephens (a civil engineer) Waino Parhaniemi - informant.

LABISKI ROAD
Believed to be the Larson family plot. Cared for by Judy Henningsen Fisher,as they are her ancestors.

Interview with Waino Parhaniemi

There is a couple gravesites up the Walluski River past Carlsons that everyone knows about.

There is one on Mrs. Labiski's place in Walluski. Just one man was buried there. Waino's uncle owned the land. His cousins said that his uncle walked toward Labiske there? He dug a hole and tipped the tombstone into a hole and buried it. His wife was superstitious and was afraid that the man would come up out of his grave. It was by Moffet's landing. It was Moffet property when he was put there. It was where there was a stable on the island by the Heino Dairy and could have been put there as early as 1850. Moffet had a donation land claim. There is no sign now of a cemetery. From the picture he has it looks like Walluski River and the island. Either Moffet or Stephens (a civil engineer) was the owner. His uncle bought it. He had another property before. We can speak to his cousins Leonard Parhaniemi and Mary and Laila; they live out there, but they don't know any more than he does. Greenwood was the older cemetery on the island and a steamboat tied up at the dock- the Moffat Dock.
In 1950 a steamer that ran up and down the river wrecked on Tansy Point. It was very little. It burned wood for fuel. He has a picture at the museum. He is interested in Walluski history pictures. He has lots and wants more. He recognizes topography. (and might be helpful). He wants pnotos of Palmer Logging Company; this was an important company. He was the grandfather to Al Palmer who doesn't have many pictures. Al never got any directly but had been given some lately. The tombstone was buried on Moffat DLC. Moffat acres are SE of there. He had 300 to 400 acres in the land claim. It was taken over by Moffat before surveyed and so it doesn't run right according to surveying meridians used now. Waino cut brush for Gelo Parker so he could survey. Gelo had to use two pair of glasses to read the transit. He always wrote everything down, unlike those who followed him. He wants me to try to find the original Greenwood in Walluski.

At the later Greenwood there was a landing and he used to pull the bodies up the hill and it was steep. "Butte" was the name of the boat. A party congregated at the Moffat DLC. He has pictures.
There was a baby's grave on Saddle Mountain Road. From Olney bridge go up the road. Get to the summit and a couple hundred feet from the summit. The ridge goes at an angle NE of the summit. Maybe 2000 feet along the ridge there is a baby's grave. People there were probably proving up on a timber claim. There was no road. There was a building made out of split fir planks. Nice wood. One room shack 24' by 16' with a shake roof. The baby's name was Niemi. Then 1000 feet befoe get to Summit there was a family Niemela who had a large house and apple trees. A woman in Warrenton, Mrs Williams, whose husband was English would know about it. Her folks lived in the area. The house was Niemela and the baby was Niemi. In 1928 he was logging in the area and they didn't disturb the grave. There was a headboard, painted and made of wood. Maybe not, he didn't get a good look at it. The Niemi baby was about 2300 feet from the highway. He knows the exact position of the grave. If you go up the road to summit and keep on top of the summit, you can't miss it. MAIL A COPY OF A MAP FOR HIM TO MARK. He wants me to mark the summit. It is not quite 3 miles to the summit fromthe Olney bridge. If I could get him a map with the summit shown, then he could place the grave within a couple hundred feet.

I asked him about the town of Casey. He said that it was Ceasy or Keasy which was a camp up Jewell and there was a camp, Never Still. So many locomotives went all day and all night, toward Clatskanie where they unloaded. There were probably 40 locomotives on that track hauling loccomotives and 9 tunnels. One was 1200 feet long and went up by the Northrup housing where the man made lake is.

Melville--doesn't know much about it, but it used to have the Astoria Southern Railway which was a public carrier. It went from Olney over the summit passed Jewell, but near to go to Elsie. It was taken over by Crown.

He was born at Scow Bay. He told Dr. Swanson today that he was born in the corner house next to Dr. Swanson's office. Eric Hauke's dad was driving along and hit a plank, went into the water and drowned. The others were saved. Mrs. Hauke married Palmer Henningsen's father and is his mother. Eric Hauke and Palmar Heningsen are his brothers.

by Liisa Penner

Today's interview with 81 year old Art Marcola began with a search for his home. Joyce Morrell and I met at her place on Lillenes Road. The directions given to us by Sally Hannu and John Birdeno were to take the Saddle Mountain Mainline road from the Youngs River Loop road just above the falls, continue eight miles keeping the river to the left. Cross one small bridge, no large bridge. --Easier said than done--. One junction after another met us with small muddy roads that went to the left. We decided to stay with those that looked more travelled. For eight miles we wandered oil-pan scraping gravel roads, up steep hills and down, and then a turn to an open vista of far off forested hills and there, an impressive near view of Saddle Mountain. At the end of the road was a house whose occupant told us that we had missed the cut-off to Marcola's about five miles back. We were told to retrace our steps, cross the bridge and go to the left. And this we thought we did. However, we were suddenly and mysteriously transported to Saddle Mountain Road and civilization. But there was Art Markola's mailbox.

In answer to our question of how do we find the man belonging to the mailbox, we were told by a man out in the field that the best way would be to take the mainline from the Youngs River Falls, and to go out eight miles, keeping the river on the left (all rather familiar instructions). So, back we went to the place that was beginning to seem like home. Almost another eight miles down the road again and I could swear we crossed the same bridge. Suddenly there was the barn to the left with the house beyond and the yellow pickup. Joyce and I gathered up our interviewing kits and jumped from one muddy hummock to the next across the front of the barn. There was the house a couple hundred feet away. Nearer was a small sauna-like building emitting smoke from its chimney, and its companion birch tree (for vastas - Obviously a Finn must have lived here). We snubbed the sauna for the old house which we discovered supported live greenery coming through the windows. From behind us came the sound of an axe on wood. We turned back to find a small elderly man entering the sauna to add more wood to his fire. This was his home, a single room about ten by fourteen feet, with a bed in one corner, a table on one side by the window and a tiny pot-bellied stove. The surprised inhabitant told us that he had heard from the Hannu's that we might visit. He pulled out chairs for us to sit on. Then he showed us the way he greets uninvited visitors. He took a long-barreled pistol from its place by the door, opened the door and waved it at his imaginary would-be attackers. After locking the door, he sat down. He talked then, the bill of his cap bobbing up and down, alternately revealing and concealing his squinting eyes. Attempts to question him about old gravesites and the history of area failed again and again as he insisted on recounting his cleverness in discerning that all those who came to his door begging help with flat tires and dead batteries were there for the purpose of taking his money and his farm equipment and disposing of him. With his pistol (which looked as though it might have accompanied Teddy's Raiders up San Juan Hill), he was able to foil their plans.

Information we did get was the following.

By the concrete bridge, before 1900, there was a logger who was cutting a tree; the tree split (barber chair) and it fell on him. He was buried by Barney Creek. A picket fence was placed around the grave and a wooden board was his marker. McGregor and Malone Logging Co. was the company he was working for. They made the fence. Hank Pfund, a logger, knows about the grave. Also Jack Niemi. Mrs. Minnie Marxen told Art about it in 1916, '17, or '18. The reason people (often loggers) were buried out in the woods was because the roads were all mudded up and they couldn't get around easily.

At Norman's Hill past Smiley's Hole by Green Mountain Road there is another gravesite. One road goes to 202 (Norman's Road). There is a row of cedars that go to the rock cliff. Art's father's stepfather, Charles Newman, planted them. (He was a Civil War Veteran. His grandmother collected a pension because of her husband's service in the Civil War). The roads were all mud and they had to bury him (?) out there. He doesn't know the exact spot.

Up Green Mountain Road almost at the end at the left, his mother's uncle, Israel Kallio, lived there. He was 90 years old and died in 1930. Before the Civil War, his uncle was in Ohio. In the winter there a man died and was buried there. It was reported to the people at the Courthouse.

He spoke about the Lillenes Cemetery. He said that the children buried there died of scarlet fever or diptheria. Ted Vandervelt puts flowers on the graves.

Of his own familiy he said: In 1910 his father bought this place. He was five going on six at the time, but he could remember the move. He had lived here ever since, except for six years in the army and one year in logging camps. Sept 29, 1946 he was discharged from the army near Drewfield, Missouri(?). He was a member of the home guards. They were to capture and kill escaped German prisoners (something he seemed to relish.) He remembered his trip back to Astoria when all servicemen displaced hords of other travelers on all transportation. His middle sister married a Navy officer and through her he is related to Mrs. Hannu's sister. His sister, Emma, lived in Portland and Sarah in California. Members of the Holladay[?] family were well-educated and have Master's Degrees. His mother was born in Vaasa Laani (Isokyro). The Kallio family was also from there. His Mother's uncle was mining in Ohio and didn't like to be underground. He heard that there were plenty of trees and fish? here and decided that this was the place to live. His father was from the Straits of Finland in the south near Estonia, (Hogland Island) which is now Russian territory. The three Koski brothers, who ran the garbage service in the '50's in Astoria, came here and sent a ticket for Art's father to come. Logging was different then. The Hakalas and Kallios, who are related, used to ride the logs down the rivers. People couldn't do that now. His father was a fisherman when he first came to this country.

by Joyce Morrell

Liisa and I each took notes during this interview and typed our reports before comparing them. There are only a few differences, which we both agreed could have been the result of our note-taking. I add the differences here only as a comparison.

The man killed on Barney Creek was a teenager, about 17 or 18 years old.

I wrote that it was Tim Vandervelt who looks after the Lillenas-Fitchu cemetery.

I wrote that Art was discharged from the Army in Florida and was given a string of bus tickets to get home, as he had to change buses many times.

Casey Cemetery
T7N R9W Section 14

Olney resident, May Swenson grew up on the Casey farm and acted as a caretaker until the land was purchased by the Watsons about 1974.
In 1976 Mrs Swenson guided county Extention agent John Grimes, Astoria newspaper columnist,Fred Andrus and local author, Sam Churchill to the cemetery.
The Daily Astorian quotes Mrs Swenson:" I know there are twelve to fourteen graves in the cemetery. It was a family cemetery. Mrs Casey's father and grandfather, whose name was McMillian lived there for many years."
Research has been very difficult and we have not yet been able to identify the other people buried here, mostly relatives of Rose's, according to all reports. Rose was an Indian, which has made this cemetery a prime target for vandals, searching for artifacts.
Possible family connections are:
- Solun G. Cook, son of George Washington Cook of Vermont. Soluns's mother was an Indian named Mary.
- Emma Cook was reported an aunt of Rose Casey.
- John McMillen/McMullen who jumped ship to settle in Clatsop county may have been Rose's father or grandfather.

In 1918 the cemetary had a picket fence and 2 fir trees facing river and grave markers.

I May Swenson lived on this homesite from 1918 till 5 yrs Contract was up, my folks had to clear one acre land each year to earn the rent to live here.

And I as a little girl had volunteered to keep the Cemetary up, have so after Rose passed away, and the Watson's purchased the homesite.

In memory to the Casey's I planted a locust tree at the head of Roses grave.

Logging had been done and one tree cut down plus the sight has been sadly disturbed, last visit I made in the last three years, all was grown up with weeds but my tree was still on the grave, told owners to leave it there! end quote!

Have lived here since 1910 can remember way back when Oscar Sigfridson can tell you many other bygones.

Rose Casey was a true Indian her Grandfather had a cabin on our hill, the husband's Irish.

This is a copy of notes written by May Swenson, Olney and given to the Cemetery Committee April 23, 1987 on occasion of our visit to her and the cemetery. The condition of the cemetery appeared to be much worse than she expected. May said that she had been thinking of writing a short history of this area and she should be encouraged.

CEMETERY NEWSLETTER

April 23, 1987

The Olney area was the focus of a cemetery search by members, Joyce Morrell, John Birdeno and Liisa Penner today. We had a perfect day, a beautiful area to search in and an informant who was really a delight. May Swenson took us to to the site of two cemeteries, the Rose Casey cemetery and the Andy Young cemetery. Our visit was to be only an interview, but Mrs. Swenson, who Joyce arranged a visit with, was eager to show us the cemetery that she had cared for since she was a child. Our visit showed why what we are doing is so important. ---There was nothing left of the Rose Casey Cemetery that we would have been able to recognize! Picture the way it looked once: The graves were not more than fifty feet away from the old house. Beautiful tall trees not native to the area shaded the grave of the woman who had planted them many years before she was buried here. The small cemetery with perhaps twelve people buried in it was on a high flat field overlooking the Youngs River which meandered far below. Green fields stretched beyond. May Swenson often visited the graves of her friend, Rose Casey, Rose's husband who died a few years earlier and the much older graves of Rose's other relatives. Yellow daffodils mingled with the blue-flowered vinca minor. May planted these and she also planted a locust to show the boundary of the grave area and to leave a marker that would last. An ornamental shrub was another marker. There were headstones here once--but no longer. Vandals began the work which the property owner finished. The site is now a dumping ground for pieces of wood from the half-torn down house, pieces which did not manage to complete the journey to the side of the hill. The low metal wall of a manure pile stands nearby. The daffodils have been cropped by the cows who forage here now. The ornamental shrub is a dead stump. A depression in the ground probably signifies a collapsed coffin.

We searched for, but did not find, the cemetery on the Andy Young place. This property is an ideal setting for bacchanalian revels; an occasional beer bottle testifies to its use as such. A wide road leads from 202 down to the river. This once heavily traveled log dump road, about fifteen feet across, is now carpeted with tiny green plants. Tall spruce trees form a canopy of green over the road. No understory of trees impedes the view of what falsely appears to be primaeval woods on either side. The terminus of this road is an apple orchard in full bloom now, and this lovely place is where the small cemetery is reported to be. A small stoney beach provides access to and from the Youngs River which is not more than about eight feet below the orchard. This was Eden; but our thoughts quickly turned to other concerns as John told us that he heard that large, vicious dogs prowl the woods to keep out intruders. As we considered that we had not spoken to the owner of the property, just his wife and he might not know who we were (or care!), we then began to view the trees in a different light--how much weight could they carry and how fast might we be able to climb them. Our informant, May, who is probably our senior by thirty years, announced that she was going to look off in this direction. And she was gone. Half an hour later she was still gone. John's falsetto calls went unanswered. On our long trek back to the top of the road we had time to consider May lying in a mess of brambles, the huge prints in the road (dog?)(bear?), and perhaps a farmer with a large double-barrelled shot gun. At the top, by the gate, there was May. "I was wondering when you would make it up here".

It was a wonderful day and we felt we had learned alot. Above all, we gained some ideas about how we should proceed on a cemetery hunt. These will be the subject of another paper.

GRANGERS CEMETERY

also known as Youngs River Cemetery

After our first unsucessful trip to search for the Youngs River Cemetery (Granger), Evelyn Hankel was kind enough to arrarnge for the owners of the surrounding land to guide us through the woods.

OUr visit on 27 OCt 1987 showed very little evidence of a cemetery. The area is overgrown with brush, berry vines and trees that are 2-3 feet thick at the base.

Over the years vandals have broken stones and dug holes in search of artifacts. We found only eight stones and would not have located them without the help of Andrew and David Young.

We were told that many of the graves had been moved to Greenwood Cemetery when it opened in the early 1900s.

The Granger Cemetery was located on the Blodgett Donation Land Claim. A dispute with a neighbor over property lines and the resulting court case caused both men to lose their land, which is when it game into the posession of the Young Family.

We started our search from an old county road bed at the point of the cemetery. Here we were told was the grave of a little girl with no stone, but an unfamiliar variety of a birch or chestnut tree. The tree was brought from Denmark by the little girl's grandparents and is now between 40 and 50 feet tall.

After scrambling over stumps and fallen limbs and untangling ourselves from blackberry vines we were shown the following stones:

- LIttle Charlie, only son of J & L Davis, born Mar 10,1872, died May 16, 1874. Carving of hand holding flower with forefinger pointing up.
-Anders Fredrikson, 1852 - 1888. Scrolled lines on stone top.
-John Newman, born Mar 24, 1871, Died Jan 20, 1898. Verse; Sweet be thy rest, Thy suffering is o'er.
-P.W. Coleman, Co A, 31st Iowa Inf. Military stone.
-Z.T. Sutherlan, died Jan 5, 1899, aged 42 yrs.
-Levi Van Baren, Co I, 20th Mich INf. Military stone.
-Lowdveig, son of H & A Oliverson, born Aug 28, 1886, Died Sept 6, 1888. Verse, Budded on earth to Bloom in Heaven.
- Beloved Son of H. & A. Henrichsen, born April 2, 1873, died Aug 26, 1889. Top edge: Nicolaus C. Carving of dove in circle. Verse; Gone to a better land, Where we shall meet again, Rest in Peace.

Names on the plat map are probably owners of the plot, not necessarily who is buried there.
